Policeman Moran's Son Badly Hurt.

William Moran son of Policeman Thomas Moran and a conductor on the Bloomfield avenue trolley line was injured Wednesday afternoon in an accident at the car barn in Montclair, and Charles Spragg also a conductor was killed.

The men had just left the conductors' room in the rear of the office and were walking alongside of the south track toward the street. They were within five feet of the main entrance when a car in charge of John Jones of Newark, a yardman, was being shunted to a switch. Spragg and Moran were caught between the car and the side of the barn and crushed. The space is so narrow that many of the larger cars scrape the sides of the building.

Jones evidently did not see the men, for he made no effort to stop the car, and was not aware of the accident until he reached the end of the switch on which the vehicle was being shunted.

After the car had passed Spragg and Moran fell over on the sidewalk. Policeman Claren, who was nearby, believed at first that the men were wrestling, but when they failed to rise the officer rushed to the spot. He found Spragg dead and Moran badly injured. Both were carried into the car barns and physicians summoned.
